Racism and Human Ecology. White Supremacy in Twentieth Century South Africa

Appendix 1: Population Statistics South Africa

To highlight the strength of ethnic categorisation as a power-keeping element of the Apartheid regime, it is necessary to describe the change of the population distribution in South Africa between 1960 and 1985, in order to gain an overview of demographic development. Based on population census from 1960, 1970, 1980 and 1985, the Bulletin of Statistics from 1960 to 1984 and the Survey of Race Relations in South Africa from 1963 to 1981, I show the distribution of 'racial' groups set by the South African government groups within the country over the years. Using the presented data, tendencies of the success in creating a modern racial segregated state will be shown.

As already stated above, Southern African population statistics have to be used with caution. However, the statistical information is useful to show how society engineering worked. Nevertheless, population statistics document the process of constructing an artificial population shift reached by exclusion of territory and changing categorisation of the population.

Dealing with racial and territorial categories, there are some interesting changes between 1960 and 1985. The numbers of 1960 and 1970 are taken from a print version of the censuses. Only the 1960 and 1970 census include the whole area of South Africa. The 1960 data uses the provinces as reference regions. However, there is a first effort to increase the proportion of the white population. There are two numbers for the Cape and Natal: the Transkeian Territories and Zululand were excluded. The 1970 is already more complex in territorial and ethnic partition. White areas are separated from Bantu Homelands. White areas are separated from Bantu Homelands. The partition of the African population into ethnic-linguistic groups starts in the 1970 version. There was a heading of ten 'Bantu National Units' plus an 'Others' category. The percentages of the single population groups I calculated myself.

I received the 1980 census in a digital version from the Datafirst portal.¹ The ethnic categories change from 1970 to 1980, with an interesting shift regarding population partition as well as epistemic practice. The 1980 census divides the population into nineteen groups. These population groups differ marginally from the National Units. The Sepedi and the Sheshoe unit no longer exists, although there is a North Sotho and a South Sotho group, which did not previously exist. The percentages of the population groups regarding the whole South African state I calculated myself. The distribution of the population groups in the single regions are calculated with SPSS via combining the parameters Province and Race. The territorial reference for the 1985 census is changed into the nine planning regions – including the Bantustans – not declared independent. These development regions were defined as follows:

Region A Western Cape including Walvis Bay 1985

Region B Northern Cape

Region C Orange Free State and QwaQwa

Region D Eastern Cape/Border

Region E Natal and KwaZulu

Region F Eastern Transvaal and KaNgwane and Part of the Simdlangentsha District

Development Region G Northern Transvaal and Lebowa and Gazankulu

Region H PWP Area and Moutse and Kwa Ndebele

Region J Western Transvaal

Like in the 1980 census, there are nineteen racial categories. Again, I calculated the population distribution with the combination of the parameters Development Region and Race. For comparison, I combined the 19 black population groups into one group called Blacks. As territorial reference, I used the whole South African territory with was only possible without the independent Homelands.

The numbers the Homeland population, population density and forced removals are taken from:

Table 22: South African Institute of Race Relations. Gordon Loraine. Horrell Muriel, A Survey of Race Relations in South Africa, 1977, (Johannesburg: South African Institute of Race Relations, 1978)

Table 23: The population numbers of South Africa are based on the numbers of the 1980 population census. The population numbers for the Republics of Venda, Transkei and Bophuthatswana are taken from: Randall, Peter. Cooper, Carole. South African Institute of Race Relations. A Survey of Race Relations in South Africa, 1982, (Johannesburg: South African Institute of Race Relations, 1983), 372.

The illustration of the population development in Thaba Nchu and Bophuthatswana was even more complex. Bophuthatswana was a Homeland with a very mixed population. In 1970, before becoming independent, 60 percent of the people living in the Tswana areas were Tswana. Following the 1980 census, the proportion had decreased to 53.8 percent although the Homeland government aimed a homogenous Tswana state. To illustrate my Thaba Nchu case study with ethnic tensions between the Tswana and the South Sotho population in progress of the incorporation into the Republic of Bophuthatswana, I used the 1970, 1980, 1985 and the 1904-1970 censuses of Thaba Nchu, Bophuthatswana, Orange Free State and Qwa Qwa, if possible. Apart from the normal problems with South African statistics, data remained incomplete. Nevertheless, I could conduct some calculations about resettlement and migration of South Sotho people. The main reason for the difficulties in obtaining population numbers from the existing material was the fact the territorial assignment changed over the years. Thaba Nchu was incorporated into Bophuthatswana in 1987, although the district no longer appears in the South African censuses after 1970. Population numbers for Thaba Nchu in archival records are given without defining ethnic groups after 1970. A population census for Bophuthatswana from 1980 was given without district codes. One can see that 814,025 Tswana people lived in the Republic, which was a quote of 53.8 percent. 4 percent of the residents were South Sotho people. Other indications for the migration of ethnic groups included the numbers of South Sotho people in the Orange Free State and QwaQwa, whereby the territorial assignments also changed. The 1970 census states 24,189 South Sotho in Basotho ba Borwa (of 24,691 people) and 777,802 in the Orange Free State which was a quote of 47.2 percent, calculated by myself. In the 1980 census, QwaQwa was counted together with KwaNdebele and KgWane. I made a cross tabulation between the Witzieshoek district, which was the only one in QwaQwa and population groups. The result was a number of 127,559 South Sotho people. 159,328 people lived in QwaQwa in 1980. These numbers document the high population increase in the Bantustan. In the Orange Free State, the numbers of South Sotho people also increased, although the proportion remained more or less the same. In 1980, 889,495 South Sotho lived in the Orange Free State, which was a quote of 45.9 percent. This is explicable with the establishment of Onverwacht/Botshabelo and the resettlement of the Kroomdrai settlers. In 1985, the development region comprised the Orange Free State and Qwa Qwa. The numbers of Sotho people officially decreased to 861,734, with a quote of 46.7 percent. I can only explain this development with the high number of informal settlers in Botshabelo. Botshabelo was incorporated into QwaQwa in 1987. The number of Tswana people in the Orange Free State decreased from 610,529 in 1970 to 156,695 in 1980.

There are three tables for the population development in Thaba Nchu. Table 24 illustrates population numbers of Thaba Nchu according to changing district boundaries. Generally, it is important to note that these numbers only refer to the de facto population; i.e. temporarily absent labour migrants were not considered for the enumeration. Especially for the period between 1936 and 1946 the high population growth seems questionable, bearing in mind the broader political events, i.e. the passing of the Native Trust and Land Act in 1936. The consequence was a reduction of the area. Certainly, the population increase in the post-1936 period was partly a result of an immigration of displaced people. The numbers are taken from different sources.

Table 26 shows the population development according the official population censuses of the South African government. The 1904 – 1970 census gives the population numbers according to the district boundaries of 1970. The numbers differ to those of the 1960 and 1970 census as well as to those given in table 24.

Map 3: Racial Concentrations and Homelands 1978

Racial Concentrations and Homelands

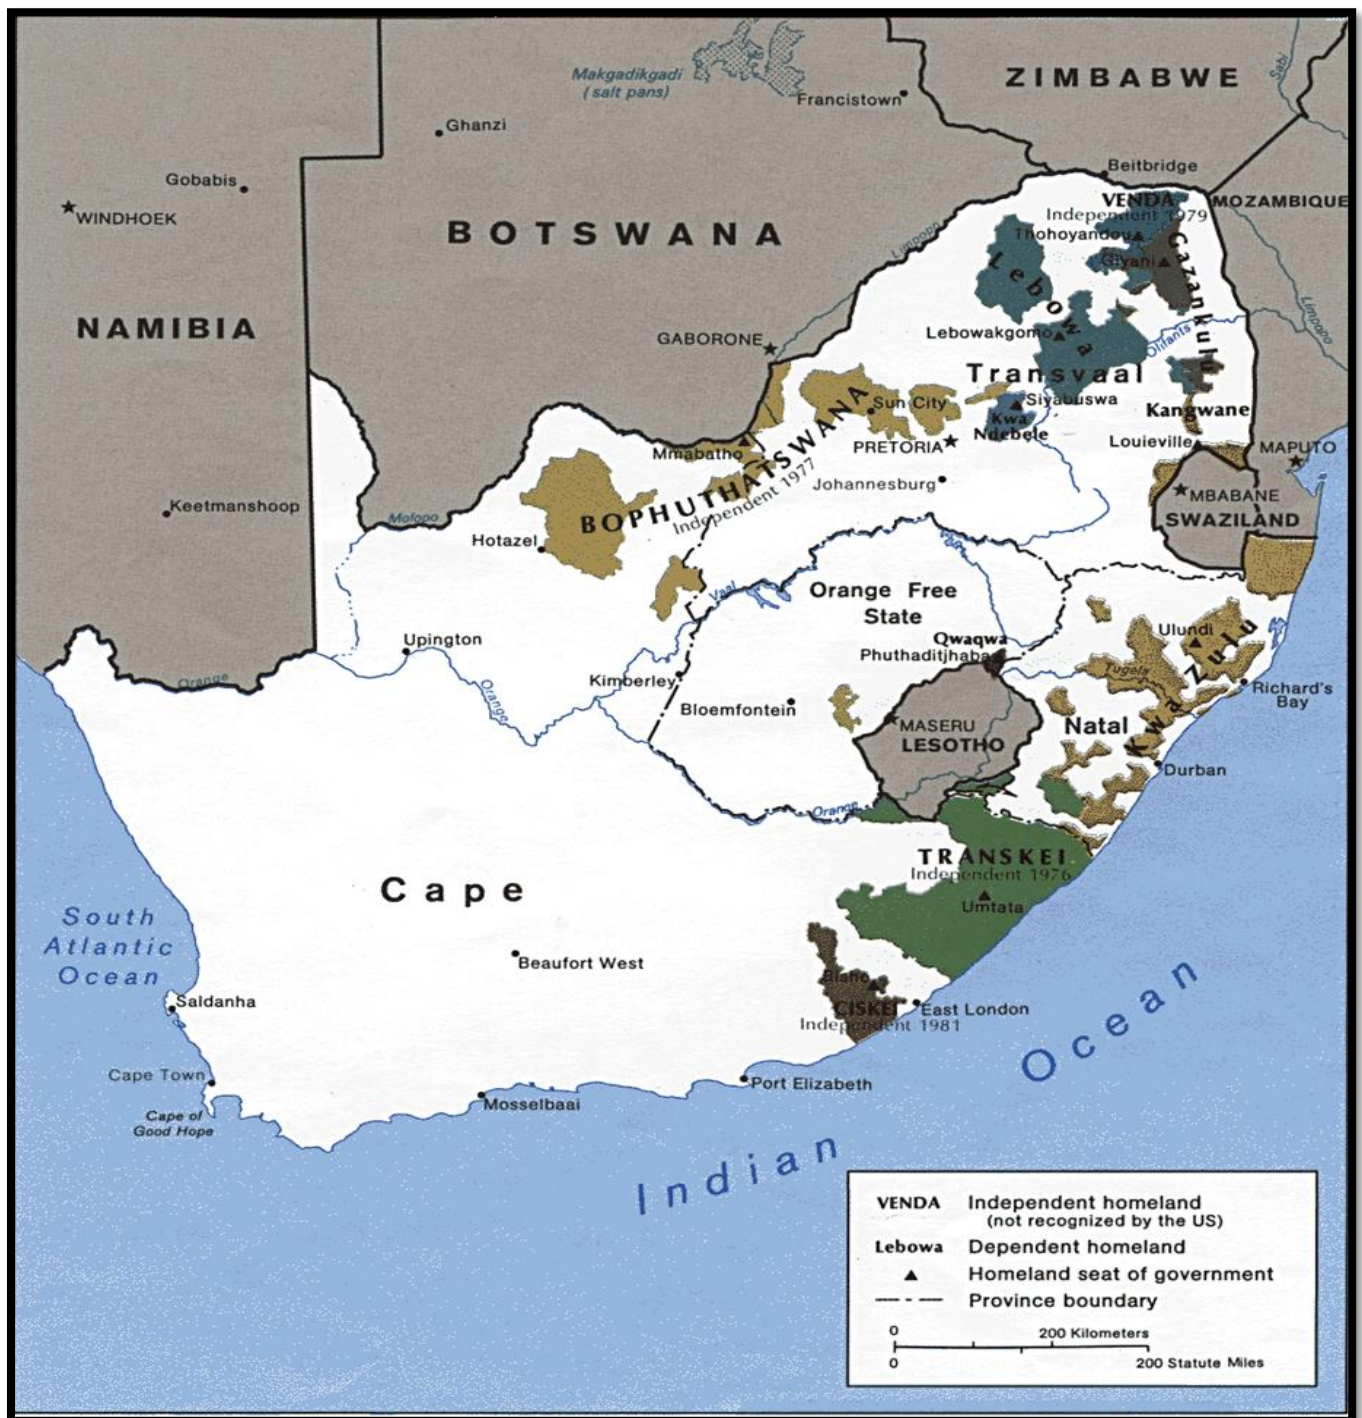

Racial concentrations of 30% or more by magisterial district

NOTE: Portions of Colored, Indian, and white areas may also have an equal or slightly larger percentage of other racial groups. Black areas have no other racial groups as high as 30%. Homelands are traditional areas set aside by the South African government for specific black ethnic groups. All have a black population in excess of 90%. Bophuthatswana, Transkei, and Venda have been granted nominal independence by South Africa.
